This anthology serves as a comprehensive guide to the literary luminaries who have shaped Wyoming's literary landscape. Explore the lives and works of these renowned authors, gain insights into their creative processes, and discover the captivating stories that have emerged from the heart of the Cowboy State.

Owen Wister: The Father of Western Literature

Owen Wister (1860-1938) is widely regarded as the father of Western literature. Born in Philadelphia, Wister first visited Wyoming in 1885 and was immediately captivated by its rugged beauty and the spirit of its people. His experiences in the West inspired his most famous novel, The Virginian (1902), which became a defining work of the Western genre.

The Virginian is an epic tale of love, adventure, and the clash of civilizations on the Wyoming frontier. It tells the story of a mysterious cowboy named The Virginian, who embodies the courage, independence, and self-reliance that became synonymous with the Western hero.

Wister's novel was a critical and commercial success, and it helped to establish Wyoming as a setting for literary exploration. His writing captured the essence of the cowboy culture and the unique landscape of the state, inspiring generations of writers to come.

Annie Proulx: The Pulitzer Prize-Winning Master of the American West

Annie Proulx, an American author known for her novels and short stories set in the American West, including Brokeback Mountain

Annie Proulx (born 1935) is one of the most acclaimed writers of the American West. Born in Norwich, Connecticut, Proulx moved to Wyoming in 1994, and the state's rugged beauty and rural lifestyle have had a profound influence on her work.

Proulx's novel Brokeback Mountain (1997) is a heartbreaking and unforgettable love story between two Wyoming cowboys. The novel was later adapted into an Academy Award-winning film in 2005.

Proulx's other works set in Wyoming include the novel The Shipping News (1993), which won the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction, and the short story collection Bad Dirt (2004). Her writing is known for its vivid and evocative descriptions of the Western landscape, its unflinching exploration of human nature, and its deep empathy for the people who inhabit this rugged and unforgiving land.

Dee Brown: The Historian of the American Indian

Dee Brown (1908-2002) was a pioneering historian of the American Indian. Born in Louisiana, Brown spent much of his life in Wyoming, where he developed a deep understanding of the history and culture of the Native American tribes who lived there.

Brown's most famous work, Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee (1970), is a powerful and moving account of the tragic history of Native Americans in the United States. The book traces the story of the Sioux people from their early encounters with European settlers to their forced removal from their ancestral lands and their eventual massacre at Wounded Knee Creek in 1890.

Brown's writing is characterized by its meticulous research, its vivid storytelling, and its deep compassion for the Native American people. His books have helped to raise awareness of the injustices that have been inflicted upon Native Americans throughout history.

Ivan g: The Chronicler of Rural Wyoming

Ivan Doig, an American novelist known for his novels set in rural Montana and Wyoming, including The Last Bus to Wisdom

Ivan Doig (1939-2015) was a beloved chronicler of rural Wyoming. Born in Montana, Doig spent much of his life on the family ranch near White Sulphur Springs, Wyoming. His experiences growing up in the West had a profound influence on his writing.

g's novels are known for their lyrical prose, their vivid descriptions of the Western landscape, and their insightful exploration of rural life. His novel The Last Bus to Wisdom (1981) is a poignant and humorous tale about a group of elderly residents of a small Wyoming town who take a bus trip to the state fair.

g's other works set in Wyoming include the novels Bucking the Sun (1986) and The Whistling Season (2006). His writing has earned him numerous awards, including the National Book Award for Fiction.

John McPhee: The Literary Geographer

John McPhee (born 1931) is a renowned literary geographer whose work has helped to bridge the gap between science and the humanities. Born in New Jersey, McPhee has written extensively about the geology, environment, and exploration of the Wyoming landscape.

McPhee's book Annals of the Former World (1998) is a Pulitzer Prize-winning masterpiece that explores the geological history of Wyoming. The book is a fascinating and accessible account of the forces that have shaped the state's landscape over millions of years.

McPhee's other works set in Wyoming include the book Rising from the Plains (1986), which tells the story of the construction of Interstate 80 through the state.

Terry Tempest Williams: The Ecologist and Spiritual Writer

Terry Tempest Williams, an American writer known for her creative nonfiction books on the natural world, including Refuge: An Unnatural History of Family and Place

Terry Tempest Williams (born 1957) is an ecologist and spiritual writer whose work has been deeply influenced by her experiences in Wyoming. Born in Salt Lake City, Utah, Williams moved to Jackson Hole, Wyoming, in 1980.

Williams' writing explores the relationship between humans and the natural world. Her book Refuge: An Unnatural History of Family and Place (1991) is a lyrical and moving memoir about her childhood in Utah and her experiences living in the Wyoming wilderness.
