"The Golden Hour" series is a culmination of Wurtele's lifelong fascination with this magical period of time. Spanning several years, the series captures the myriad ways in which the Golden Hour transforms the Canadian landscape, from the rugged mountains of the Rockies to the tranquil shores of Lake Superior.

The Essence of the Golden Hour

The Golden Hour occurs twice each day: once at sunrise and once at sunset. During this brief window of time, the sun's rays are filtered through the atmosphere, creating a warm, golden glow that illuminates the world in a soft and flattering light. Shadows become elongated, creating a sense of depth and drama, while colors appear more vibrant and saturated. It is a time of heightened sensory perception, when the boundaries between reality and fantasy seem to blur.

Wurtele's photographs capture the essence of this extraordinary phenomenon, transporting viewers to the heart of the Golden Hour. Her images are a symphony of light and color, inviting the viewer to experience the ethereal beauty of this fleeting moment.

A Tapestry of Landscapes

The Golden Hour series encompasses a diverse range of landscapes, each imbued with its own unique character and charm. From the majestic snow-capped peaks of the Canadian Rockies to the pristine shorelines of Lake Superior, Wurtele's lens has captured the full spectrum of the country's natural beauty.

In her photographs of the Rockies, Wurtele showcases the dramatic interplay of light and shadow as the sun dips below the horizon. The mountains, bathed in a warm glow, appear both monumental and ethereal, their jagged peaks piercing the heavens. In contrast, her images of Lake Superior evoke a sense of tranquility and serenity. The water, illuminated by the Golden Hour, takes on a shimmering, golden hue, reflecting the sky like a polished mirror.

The Power of Observation

Wurtele's photographs are not simply beautiful; they are also deeply insightful. They reveal her keen understanding of the natural world and her ability to capture the subtle details that often go unnoticed. In her images, the viewer is invited to slow down and observe the world around them, to appreciate the beauty that is often hidden in plain sight.

One of the most striking aspects of "The Golden Hour" series is Wurtele's use of natural elements as compositional tools. In one image, a lone tree stands silhouetted against the backdrop of a golden sky, its branches reaching skyward like a beacon of hope. In another, a flock of birds takes flight, their wings illuminated by the warm light of the setting sun. These elements add a sense of movement and drama to the photographs, creating a dynamic and engaging visual experience.

The Significance of "The Golden Hour"

"The Golden Hour" series is more than just a collection of beautiful photographs; it is a profound exploration of the beauty and transience of life. The Golden Hour is a reminder that even the most fleeting moments can hold immense beauty and significance. It is a time to reflect on the present moment and to appreciate the wonders of the natural world.

Wurtele's photographs invite us to slow down and savor the simple pleasures in life. They remind us that even in the most ordinary moments, there is beauty to be found if we only take the time to look.
